

Assistant Professor Job Announcement

The University of South Florida is searching for an Assistant Professor to join the Applied Behavior Analysis Master's Program and the new ABA Doctoral Program in the Department of Child and Family Studies. The new Doctoral Program will accept its first class of students in fall, 2013. The candidate will be expected to teach, mentor graduate students, supervise theses and dissertations, conduct a productive, independent line of scholarly research consistent with the mission of the ABA program and the Department of Child and Family Studies, and secure external federal funding.

This 9-month tenure-earning position is offered at the rank of assistant professor. The qualified candidate will have a Ph.D. in behavior analysis or related discipline (e.g., psychology, education, special education) and be certified by the Behavior Analyst Certification Board (BACB) or be eligible for certification. The candidate is expected to have broad training in behavior analysis (applied and conceptual or experimental) and expertise in a specific area of applied behavior analysis as evidenced by publications in refereed journals, and presentations at professional conferences. Furthermore, the candidate should have success in obtaining federal grant funding or show promise for obtaining federal funding. In addition to conducting an independent line of thematic research, the candidate should demonstrate the ability to supervise graduate student research, including master's theses and doctoral dissertations. In terms of teaching, the candidate is expected to have prior university teaching experience.

Minimum Qualifications: An earned doctoral degree in behavior analysis or related discipline (e.g., psychology, education, special education) from an accredited institution, certification by the Behavior Analyst Certification Board (or certification eligible), behavior analysis teaching experience, experience supervising theses or dissertations, and a demonstrated record of achievement in scholarly research in behavior analysis as evidenced by publications in refereed journals and the promise for success in obtaining extramural research funding.

Preferred Qualifications: A record of extramural research grant funding, experience in conducting research with community partners, research interests that complement or extend the interests of the current faculty (examples include organizational behavior management, behavioral pediatrics, autism, bio-behavioral approaches to behavior analysis, substance abuse, or clinical applications of behavior analysis), experience supervising doctoral dissertations, experience teaching courses in the experimental analysis of behavior.

About the ABA Master's Program at USF

The Applied Behavior Analysis Master's Program at USF is a two year, full time program with a course sequence and practicum experience approved by the BACB. Students take six core courses and two elective courses, participate in 1,000 hours of supervised practicum in community agencies, participate in a practicum seminar each semester, and conduct a data based thesis in applied behavior analysis. The candidate will join four faculty members who currently teach in the program. The proposed doctoral program in ABA is a three year full time program that will build on the successful master's program.
